Federated Integrated Network for Data Exchange & Retrieval (FINDER®)

After the horrific events of September 11, 2001, the leaders of several Florida law enforcement agencies, in partnership with the University of Central Florida, took on the challenge of developing a tool to address the absence of a truly effective information sharing network linking various and disparate law enforcement entities. Law enforcement agencies urgently needed electronic access to investigative information relating to persons, vehicles, scrap metal and pawned property; information that was stored in various databases within Florida's 355 state and local law enforcement agencies.

The solution was the development of the application known as FINDER®. With this system, law enforcement agencies are able to electronically share their low level information over a secure statewide criminal justice network. The critical information that was once located in multiple disparate databases was now instantly and electronically viewable to other agencies through a unique, distributed architectural design that was created specifically for this project.

BENEFITS OF FINDER:

- Distributed Federated Architecture (see diagram above) – FINDER® does not warehouse your data, your agency's data remains at your agency. FINDER® provides an interface to allow other agencies to have access to your information, while leaving you in control of your data.
- LEXS-SR / FIPS 140-2 Compliant – FINDER® is designed to meet the technological directives established by the federal government for sharing law enforcement data. This ensures a solid foundation for future expansion.
