Lost in the records of time is the history of the ancient wizard of Stormfield mixing his blood with a mortal. A mortal he dubbed the Shadowlink for she bridged the magical world with the ordinary world. Within her clan were three other families. For the eldest child in each of these families, the wizard bestowed magical powers in one of the elements. There was the Aerial of the air element, the Alchemist of the water element, and the Thaumaturge of the fire element. The Shadowlink, linked to the ancient wizard, had powers in Earth and the other three elements.

With Europe at the height of witch hunts, magic brought persecution. Even keeping to themselves, suspicion and rumors had the Shadowlink clan regularly moving to escape the witch hunts. Each time they moved, they used less of their powers. Still, they were persecuted. In desperation, during the 17th century the Shadowlink clan traveled in the dark of night across the vast ocean to an isolated area of Salem Village, Massachusetts. There, forbidding the use of magic and housing their birds, they were hopeful this was the final destination of reestablishing their Shadowlink community.

Tragically, as Salem Village developed closer to the remote Shadowlink community, a fear of witches brought the witch hunts and trials of 1692. Desperate to escape the Gallows Hill hangings, each family decided to move in a different direction. Like the four winds, they spread into the northern, eastern, western, and southern parts of North America. Now the only things that connected them were the family Ruiries, the birds, and the Grimoires. As decades spun into centuries, that mystical connection also disappeared.

It seemed the Shadowlink witches and wizards had mysteriously vanished.
