E. If amending or adding additional Articles, enter change(s) here:

(Attach additional sheets, if necessary). (Be specific)

1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand the preferences and behaviors of potential customers. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be unique and offer a clear value proposition to the target market.

2. After developing a concept, the next step is to create a prototype. A prototype is a preliminary model of the product that allows the development team to test and refine their ideas. This can be done through various methods, such as 3D printing, computer simulations, or building a physical model. The prototype is used to gather feedback from potential users and make necessary adjustments to the design.

3. Once a prototype is developed, the next step is to conduct a feasibility study. This study evaluates the technical, financial, and market viability of the product. It involves assessing the resources required for production, the potential costs, and the competitive landscape. The feasibility study helps the development team make informed decisions about whether to proceed with the product development process.

4. The final step in the process is to launch the product into the market. This involves creating a marketing plan, establishing distribution channels, and promoting the product to the target audience. The launch is a critical moment for the product, as it determines its initial success and sets the stage for future growth. Continuous monitoring and evaluation are essential to ensure the product remains competitive and meets the needs of the market.

F. If an amendment provides for an exchange, reclassification, or cancellation of issued shares, provisions for implementing the amendment if not contained in the amendment itself:

(if not applicable, indicate N/A)

[illegible]
