Here we go again... This is the third (or possibly fourth) year in a row that I did not receive the form for the annual filing until in the penalty phase. Believing that last year's episode was the result of the changing of address of my agent I changed the agent to myself, listing my home address as the default. Nevertheless, back from vacation I come to find the same story.

Since my annual renewal fee is only $140+/- it is hardly worth this hassle to delay such a payment for a few months. There is plenty of money in the account and my credit history is stellar. I do not know what is happening, but I do have a suggestion. Now that there is on-line filing, perhaps you might consider establishing a database so that the forms can be sent electronically as well as received. Therefore if your eMail to me is not bounced back to you, you know that I received it and I therefore will have no excuse for a late filing. I'd welcome such a system with open arms. I don't enjoy late fees, writing letters, and been seen as delinquent.

I am the only general partner and my wife is the only limited partner. It's not the end of the world if the property reverted to a tenancy by the entireties. Anyway, enclosed is my personal check for the filing fee as it would have been if I had received the original form. If that's OK, so be it. Otherwise I guess I'll just let the LP lapse. God Bless...
