12.5 Small Business/Self-Employed/Other Business : Form SS-4 & Employer Identification Number (EIN)

Is an employer ID number the same as a tax ID number?

Yes, an employer identification number, or EIN, is also known as a taxpayer identification number, or TIN. A sole proprietorship that has no employees and files no excise or pension tax returns and a LLC with a single owner (where the owner will file employment tax returns) are the only businesses that do not need an employer identification number. In these instances, the sole proprietor uses his or her social security number as the taxpayer identification number.

Does a small company need a tax ID number?

A sole proprietor who does not have any employees and who does not file any excise or pension plan tax returns is the only business person who does not need an employer identification number. In this instance, the sole proprietor uses his or her social security number as the taxpayer identification number.

Under what circumstances am I required to change my employer identification number (EIN)?

If you already have an EIN, and the organization or ownership of your business changes, you may need to apply for a new number. Some of the circumstances under which a new number is required are as follows:

- An existing business is purchased or inherited by an individual who will operate it as a sole proprietorship
- A sole proprietorship changes to a corporation or a partnership,
- A partnership changes to a corporation or a sole proprietorship,
- A corporation changes to a partnership or a sole proprietorship, or
- An individual owner dies, and the estate takes over the business.

This list is not all inclusive. Please refer to the website www.irs.gov under Business, then Employer ID Numbers.
