THEORY OF THE EARTH

CHAPTER I

The earth is a sphere, and its surface is covered by water and land. The water is called the sea, and the land is called the earth. The sea is divided into oceans and seas, and the land is divided into continents and islands.

The earth is divided into four parts, called the four quarters of the world. These are the East, the West, the North, and the South. The East is the part of the world which is towards the rising of the sun, and the West is the part which is towards the setting of the sun.

The North is the part of the world which is towards the North Pole, and the South is the part which is towards the South Pole.

The earth is covered by a thin layer of air, called the atmosphere. The atmosphere is divided into five parts, called the five regions of the atmosphere. These are the Troposphere, the Stratosphere, the Mesosphere, the Thermosphere, and the Ionosphere.

The Troposphere is the part of the atmosphere which is nearest to the earth's surface, and the Stratosphere is the part which is above the Troposphere.

The Mesosphere is the part of the atmosphere which is above the Stratosphere, and the Thermosphere is the part which is above the Mesosphere.

The Ionosphere is the part of the atmosphere which is above the Thermosphere, and it is the part of the atmosphere which is most important for the transmission of radio waves.

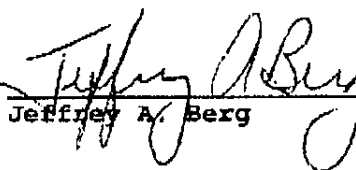

The earth is also covered by a thin layer of water, called the hydrosphere. The hydrosphere is divided into two parts, called the liquid hydrosphere and the solid hydrosphere.

The liquid hydrosphere is the part of the hydrosphere which is in the form of liquid water, and the solid hydrosphere is the part which is in the form of ice and snow.
