1. The first step in the process of creating a new product is to identify a market need. This involves conducting market research to understand the preferences and behaviors of potential customers. Once a need is identified, the next step is to develop a concept that addresses this need. This concept should be innovative and differentiated from existing products in the market.

2. After developing a concept, the next step is to create a prototype. This allows the development team to visualize the product and test its functionality. Prototyping can be done using various methods, such as 3D printing or building a physical model. The prototype is used to gather feedback from potential users and make necessary adjustments to the design.

3. Once the prototype is refined, the next step is to conduct a feasibility study. This study evaluates the technical, financial, and market viability of the product. It involves assessing the resources required for production, the potential costs, and the competitive landscape. The feasibility study helps in making informed decisions about whether to proceed with the product development.

4. The final step in the process is to launch the product into the market. This involves creating a marketing strategy to promote the product and reach the target audience. The launch is typically followed by a period of monitoring and evaluation to assess the product's performance and gather customer feedback. This feedback is used to make improvements and refine the product over time.

(If an effective date is listed, the date must be specific and cannot be prior to date of filing or more than 90 days after filing.) Pursuant to 605.0207 (3)(b)

(b) The 90th day after the record is filed.
