1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to define the problem clearly. This involves identifying the specific issue or situation that is causing concern or difficulty. It is important to be as precise as possible in describing the problem, including any relevant details and context.

2. Once the problem has been defined, the next step is to gather information about it. This can involve researching the problem, talking to people who are involved in it, or looking at data and statistics. The goal is to gain a better understanding of the problem and its causes, and to identify any potential solutions or interventions.

3. After gathering information, the next step is to analyze the problem. This involves looking at the information that has been gathered and identifying the key factors that are contributing to the problem. It is important to consider both the immediate causes of the problem and any underlying factors that may be contributing to it.

4. Once the problem has been analyzed, the next step is to develop a plan of action. This involves identifying the specific steps that need to be taken to address the problem, and determining the resources that will be needed to implement the plan. It is important to make the plan as realistic as possible, taking into account any constraints or limitations.

5. The final step in the process is to implement the plan and monitor the results. This involves putting the plan into action and tracking the progress of the intervention. It is important to be flexible and responsive to any changes or challenges that arise, and to be prepared to adjust the plan as needed.

Note: If the date inserted in this block does not meet the applicable statutory filing requirements, this date will not be listed as the document's effective date on the Department of State's records.
