Most commonly, an LLC is used to enhance personal liability protection from lawsuits. It has its own separate identity from you and needs to be treated as such.

A LLC may be used for a variety of purposes. In most cases, however, it is used to provide a layer of asset protection. Normally, these persons are also those who initially establish the LLC.

You may also use the LLC as a conduit for payment of salaries to the Manager(s) that are running the day to day activities of the LLC. It can be used for other business activities as well.

Should the business activities of the LLC give rise to the possibility of a creditor claim exceeding LLC assets, you should discuss with your attorney your options.
