Article III: Purpose

The Writers Collaborative, Inc. will operate as a private, nonprofit foundation with a unique and deep commitment to writing, literature and the community. The mission of the Collaborative is to cultivate and support local literary-cultural enclaves in communities with historically underserved audiences. The foundation's programs, and the projects which it supports through small grants and private donations, are intended to bring writers and thinkers, community organizations and 'ordinary' people together in a shared, peaceful environment to engage the powerful avenues of reading and writing. Stimulating conversation that crosses social, economic and cultural barriers, encouraging a deeper understanding of ourselves and others, fostering wisdom in an age of information, and providing context in a time of change are among the foundation's core objectives. The Collaborative is particularly interested in public literary and humanities programs that encourage and support:

- Aspiring writers of all ages and interests
- Literacy
- Student advancement
- Teacher enrichment
- Community-based reading and writing

Its grants and programs promote collaboration between individuals and various literary, cultural, educational and community organizations, such as universities, colleges, schools, museums, libraries, professional associations, literary groups, historical societies, social service agencies and civic groups.
