Vision Statement

The vision of our organization is that of a world in which individuals and communities across the globe are empowered to take of every kind. Economic poverty as well as poor knowledge, both of self and of the world in which they reside.

Mission Statement

At the International Center for Intellectual Development (ICID), we equate the term Intellect with Open Mindedness. Therefore species, particularly as it relates to both thinking and reasoning.

We define self-knowledge as an understanding of the origins of the species to which we belong, especially since scholars and scientists have made these outstanding revelations in the previous century.

It is imperative that members of this species are made aware that our is a world replete with wealth, enough to make poverty a subject of history. Knowledge of self as a member of a species and its origins is imperative for those who embark on this mission.

Article VIII.

The International Center for Intellectual Development ICID, has a strong connection to Costa Rica where there is a large number of American expatriates. To quote the current president, economist and former World Bank official Rodrigo Chavez Castro, there are more Americans in Costa Rica than Costa Ricans in America. In addition, a large number of Costa Rican citizens are connected to this international organization. That country therefore, will be the seat of one of the first branches outside these United States.

The International Center for Intellectual Development operates in every country where open minded individuals can be found

Article IX.

Having defined Open Mindedness as the greatest form of wealth, an understanding of the extraordinary richness with which our planet is endowed, our ultimate goal is the elimination of every form of poverty among humans.
