Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos. The subjects included 60 men who had worked in an asbestos vermiculite mine and 60 men who had worked in a vermiculite mine without asbestos exposure. The subjects were matched by age, education, and smoking status. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the group exposed to asbestos than in the control group.
