Dear Ms. Hood:

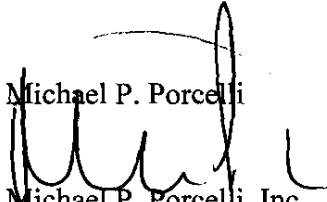

I received a disturbing notice in yesterday's mail notifying me that my corporation has been dissolved. I must admit that this came to me as a complete surprise, and I cannot truly remember receiving anything in the mail regarding filing an annual report.

I am small business owner (just me) and I am still relatively ignorant regarding what to file and when. I have an accountant that handles these things for me. He claims that I should have received the filing report in January, a second notice in March, and a third notice in September. I can honestly say that if I received these notices, I would have acted on it immediately as I am doing now.

I don't throw anything away that has to do with the IRS and the State, and I always try to do the right thing with regard to paying my taxes and applicable fees, as you can see by your records that I have paid all of the fees for my corporation in 2000 and 2001, the first two years of my S-corporation.

I have enclosed the filing fee – there has been no changes to my corporation, and I fear that this error on my part has jeopardized my ability to provide for my family. I have no intentions of not continuing my corporation for many years to come.
