1. The first step in the process of the scientific method is to make an observation or ask a question. For example, you might notice that plants in a sunny location grow faster than plants in a shady location. This leads to the question: "Does the amount of sunlight affect the growth rate of plants?"

2. Next, you formulate a hypothesis, which is a tentative answer to your question. In this case, you might hypothesize: "If a plant receives more sunlight, then it will grow faster."

3. To test your hypothesis, you design an experiment. This involves setting up two groups of plants: one group in a sunny location (the experimental group) and one group in a shady location (the control group). You ensure that all other factors, such as water and soil, are kept constant.

4. You then collect data by measuring the height of the plants in each group over a period of several weeks. You record the data in a table, noting the growth rate of each plant.

5. Finally, you analyze the data and draw a conclusion. If the plants in the sunny location grew significantly taller than the plants in the shady location, you would conclude that your hypothesis was supported: "Plants receive more sunlight, they grow faster."
