C. If amending or adding additional Articles, enter change(s) here:

(Attach additional sheets, if necessary). (Be specific)

1. The first step in the process of the scientific method is to make an observation or ask a question. This is often based on something you notice in the world around you, or a problem you want to solve. For example, you might notice that a plant in your garden is growing slowly, or you might wonder why the sky is blue.

2. Next, you make a hypothesis, which is a guess or prediction about what you expect to happen. This is often based on your previous knowledge or a theory. For example, you might hypothesize that the plant is growing slowly because it doesn't get enough water, or that the sky is blue because of the way light waves interact with the atmosphere.

3. Then, you design an experiment to test your hypothesis. This involves deciding what you will do, what you will measure, and how you will control for other factors that might affect your results. For example, you might decide to water the plant more frequently and see if it grows faster, or you might use a spectrometer to measure the wavelengths of light in the sky.

4. After you have designed your experiment, you perform it and collect data. This is where you actually do the experiment and record what happens. For example, you might water the plant every day for a week and measure its height, or you might take measurements of the sky's color at different times of the day.

5. Finally, you analyze the data and draw a conclusion. This is where you look at the results of your experiment and decide if they support your hypothesis or not. For example, you might find that the plant grew faster when you watered it more, or that the sky is blue because of the way light waves interact with the atmosphere.

F. If an amendment provides for an exchange, reclassification, or cancellation of issued shares, provisions for implementing the amendment if not contained in the amendment itself:
