1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to recognize that a problem exists. This is often done by comparing current performance with a desired state or goal. If there is a significant gap between the two, a problem is identified.

2. Once a problem is identified, the next step is to define the problem more precisely. This involves determining the scope of the problem, the resources available, and the constraints that may be affecting the problem.

3. The third step is to analyze the problem. This involves identifying the causes of the problem and determining the relationships between different factors. This step is often done using tools such as fishbone diagrams or the 5 Whys technique.

4. The fourth step is to develop a solution. This involves brainstorming potential solutions, evaluating them, and selecting the most appropriate one. This step is often done using techniques such as SWOT analysis or the Delphi method.

5. The fifth step is to implement the solution. This involves putting the chosen solution into action and monitoring its progress. This step is often done using tools such as Gantt charts or PERT charts.

6. The final step is to evaluate the results. This involves comparing the actual results with the desired state and determining whether the problem has been solved. If not, the process may need to be repeated.
