11. In addition to the parameters of a function, the function itself may be used as an argument. This is called a higher-order function. The function `map` is a higher-order function. It takes a function `f` and a list `l` as arguments and returns a new list containing the results of applying `f` to each element of `l`. For example, `(map square [1, 2, 3, 4])` returns `[1, 4, 9, 16]`. The function `map` is defined as follows:
