14. The term "substantive" is the characteristic of being with the highest degree of rational and logical quality for the assessment of which has been the most fully developed. However, this is not a simple and direct question, since the concept of a substantiated principle is that which is the product of a process that has been subjected to a wide range of critical analysis. It is not a simple question of the degree to which the term of a doctrine is substantiated, because the question is transferred to the level of the degree of the substantiation of the doctrine itself.
