Dear Mr. Sean Toner,

I am writing to you with the utmost urgency. This past fall I sent a letter to the state with my correct business address and a check for 150.00. Then, much to my surprise, my landlord notified me that my company had been dissolved by the state. After a couple of lengthy calls to your office, your representatives told me that my check for 150.00 had been returned due to an error in the application process, and instructed me to write a letter to your office stating my case.

I do believe my failure to understand the application process was in part my fault, but due to the original mistake in address, I was not allowed the time to make such a grave error. I am hoping the state will see my mistake as human, realize that I am not avoiding issue, and show some financial leniency in this matter. Financially speaking, this past quarter has left my company in financial dire straits and the enormity of the fines as imposed by the state will be devastating to my small restaurant.

Sincerely,

Christian M. Hershman
