Dear Sirs:

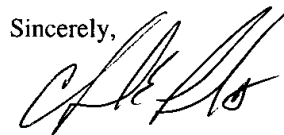

Last year, I sent a letter to you letting you know that my address had changed. On October 16, I received a letter addressed to me stating that my corporation has been dissolved. When I looked at the address on the form, it listed my old address that I had sent in the change for.

I have not received anything from you until October 16th and I called your offices immediately. I went online to download the Uniform Business Report (UBR) and I have filled it out. Please change my old address to the new one listed on the UBR and the application for reinstatement. I am not sure if I was supposed to fill out the reinstatement form, but I went ahead and filled it out.

I apologize that I did not contact you earlier, but since I did not receive anything from you, I figured that everything was fine. I am a new corporation and I am not familiar with all of the forms. Since I filled out my corporate tax returns and I had given my CPA everything that I had received, I just thought that everything had been sent to the state and was done properly. When I received the letter of dissolution I was shocked because I thought that I had done everything.

When I called you, I was told that the re-instatement fee would be waived because I had not received the UBR in the mail. Please contact me immediately if this is not correct.

Sincerely,

Charles E. Curle III
President
