Election sparks protests

Pro-Russian candidate wins in Ukraine balloting

By Mark McDonald, MOSCOW —

Tens of thousands of protesters braved freezing temperatures Monday to denounce the apparent victory of the government candidate in Ukraine's presidential election.

With nearly all the votes counted, Prime Minister Viktor Yanukovich led opposition candidate Viktor Yushchenko by nearly 3 percentage points, according to the Central Election Commission.

Exit polls Sunday night had given the challenger a large lead. But that apparent advantage evaporated overnight as election officials counted the paper ballots.

Yushchenko, a former prime minister who favors closer ties to Europe and the West, addressed a huge rally Monday in Independence Square in the capital, Kiev. He charged the authorities with "total fraud," called for an emergency session of Parliament and told his supporters to keep up their protests "until victory."

"From all parts of Ukraine, on cars, cars, planes and trains, tens of thousands of people are on their way here," Yushchenko said. "Our action is only beginning."

The rally continued into the night in an almost festive atmosphere. Many in the crowd wore orange scarves, hats and ribbons. Orange is the campaign's trademark color.

Tens of international monitors declared the election deeply flawed. Sen. Richard Lugar, the Indiana Republican who went to Ukraine as the U.S. government's official observer, said authorities had tampered with the vote.

"It is now apparent that there was a concerted and forceful program of Election Day fraud and abuse enacted with the leadership or cooperation of the authorities," said Lugar, the chairman of the Senate

Powell tries to restart talks

By Warren P. Strobel and Sergey Sarnakhi Nelson, JERUSALEM —

Secretary of State Colin Powell won a cautious pledge from Israel on Monday to ease its military grip over Palestinian areas in order to make possible an election to replace the late Yasser Arafat.

Palestinian leaders, who Powell met in a quick trip to the ancient West Bank city of Jericho, reacted with wary optimism to the promises by Israel Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's government, which offered no specifics.

Before flying to Sharon el Sheikh, Egypt, for an international conference on Iraq, Powell spent a day trying to help engineer a smooth path to the Palestinians' Jan. 9 elections. The Bush administration hopes cooperation on the voting could lead to a modest restoration of trust between the sides and the revival of long-dormant peace talks. Powell reported that what he heard from the Israelis and Palestinians, while vague, is the first hopeful thing he's seen in four years. But, as Powell warned, any progress in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict remain vulnerable to the same threat as in the past: attacks by Palestinian militants opposed to negotiation. Sharon has made it clear he'll take no steps that he thinks would risk Israel's security.

"We will do everything we can in order to remove any obstacle that the Palestinians might face in their preparations for elections," Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Sharon said.

But, Sharon added, "We are not going to do anything that might damage or harm the security of the people of the state of Israel."

Palestinians say the elections can succeed unless Israel redeploy its troops from cities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, eases travel restrictions and military checkpoints and allows roughly 100,000 Palestinians in predominantly Arab East Jerusalem to vote.

Powell praised the conduct of the cooperative Palestinian leadership that he met over after Arafat died on Nov. 11 and said he would make a strong pitch to U.S. lawmakers for direct American aid to the Palestinians.
