14. The finding that the three categories of people with the highest degree of interest and knowledge for the country's political situation are the same, namely, the political elite, the political opposition and the political press, suggests that the country's political situation is perceived as a political issue. The country's political situation is perceived as a political issue, and that is, in part, why the country's political situation is perceived as a political issue. However, the fact that the country's political situation is perceived as a political issue does not mean that the country's political situation is perceived as a political issue. The country's political situation is perceived as a political issue, and that is, in part, why the country's political situation is perceived as a political issue.
