14. The results of the above research, together with the long, carefully formulated and discussed study by the author, taken as a whole, make it possible to draw the following conclusions: the author has shown the normal aspect of suppressed, unexpressed feelings and emotions and that they, together with the normal aspect of the personality, are not separated from the rest of the personality and the personality as a whole. The author has also shown that the suppression of the normal or the pathological aspects of the personality is not a necessary condition for the development of the personality as a whole. The author has also shown that the suppression of the normal or the pathological aspects of the personality is not a necessary condition for the development of the personality as a whole. The author has also shown that the suppression of the normal or the pathological aspects of the personality is not a necessary condition for the development of the personality as a whole.
